

Prime-Time series

Each course in the Prime-Time Bible Study series offers 6 sessions of Bible study aimed primarily at high school students, though it also appropriate for recent high-school graduates.

The textbook is the Bible itself, usually studied on a chapter-by-chapter basis and carefully exegeted in the Reformed/Presbyterian tradition. Teaching/learning methods are varied and appealing, encouraging group members to work cooperatively or individually to discover for themselves the richness of a given passage and book.

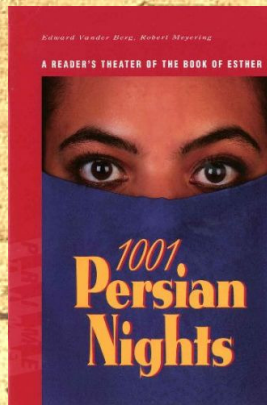

Prime-Time Bible Studies include a thorough leader's guide and a book of perforated handouts for each group member.

1001 Persian Nights

A Reader's Theater of the Book of Esther

Edward Vander Berg and Robert Meyering

This new look at the dramatic book of Esther uses the reader's theater approach to help students "live into" the story and relate it to their own experience. On one level, the book of Esther is the engaging and suspenseful story of how two courageous Jews defeated one egomaniac Canaanite, Haman, saving their own people from destruction. On another level, it is the equally compelling story of God's providence operating - without miraculous means - in the day-to-day lives of his people to bring about their salvation.

Light at the End of the Tunnel

Isaiah's Vision of Hope

Karen J. Wilk

Give young people a glimpse into the lives of God's people during their captivity in Babylon. In a social situation that often seemed wicked and hopeless - similar in many respects to our own - Isaiah brought God's message of comfort and hope. Begin with the theme of Israel's sin and God's judgement in the parable of the vineyard, then take a look at Isaiah's call. Finally, listen to the message Isaiah brought God's people.

Dare to Care

What the New Testament Says About Good Relationships

Raymond Blacketer and Sandra Langeveld Blacketer

The most significant experiences in a young person's life all have to do with relationships. Interacting with friends, with mom and dad, with brothers and sisters, with peers at school, and with teachers and other adults is a big part of the process of growing up. These relationships provide great opportunities to give and receive love, to grow and encourage others to grow, and to help and be helped through hard times.

Stones, Thrones, and a Valley of Bones

Finding Your Way in the Old Testament

Dan Vander Ark

Introduce young people to the different types of literature in the Old Testament - narrative, law, prophecy, poetry, and wisdom literature - and equip them to read passages of each genre. By looking at various passages of Scripture, the group will learn why God used these different forms of writing and how they work together to better communicate God's message than any single type of writing could.

Gospels, Acts, and End-Time Tracts

Finding Your Way in the New Testament

Dan Vander Ark

Introduce young people to the different types of literature in the New Testament - gospel, parable, narrative, letter and apocalyptic literature - and equip them to read passages of each genre. By looking at various passages of Scripture the group will also learn why God used these different forms of writing and how they work together to better communicate God's message than any single type of writing could.

What's Real, What's Not?

Insights from Luke 19-24

Norman D. Stolpe

Uncover and understand the realities that hide behind appearances. Authors, artists and musicians have explored this theme for generations. We continue to search for and decipher these hidden realities in our everyday lives.
